

POPPY

There lived a girl named Olivia. One day, she was walking to the stream when she spotted a rabbit with an injured leg, she took it in and brought it to home and put a bandage on the rabbit's leg. She kept the rabbit on her bed and named it Poppy and went to sleep.

The next day, Olivia woke up to a scream AAA! She ran downstairs and saw her sister screaming and the rabbit hopping around. “It's ok! It is poppy”, said Olivia and took the poppy in her hands. “Who is Poppy, and where did you get it?” asked Arya. Olivia replied “Poppy is my rabbit name. I got a Poppy near the stream, it's leg was injured, so I took Poppy. Do not tell Mom and Dad, they would not allow me to keep him”. Arya said “No”. She ran to their parents and told them. The parents were angry and shouted at her and threw the rabbit out. That night she went out and took Poppy and sneaked to her room. After a month, one morning, she woke up and she could not find Poppy, searched every room, and finally, she found him thumping on his hind legs, on the bed near her father. Olivia understood that Poppy sensed some kind of danger and was telling her that there was something wrong with her father. She ran and called her mother, “Mom, something is wrong with Dad”. The mother checked the father; he was unconscious. She called the ambulance, and the ambulance came and took him to the hospital. They got in the car, rode to the hospital and waited for the doctor. The doctor called in the mother, the mother entered, and the doctor spoke: "Your husband is doing better, you brought him at the right time, he had a heart attack, but he has to stay for a few days". The mother left the room, and they went back home, and the mother told them everything that the doctor said. She turned to Olivia and said, “You can keep Poppy”. Olivia replied, “Thank you, Mom”.
